

Revealed: Gay Teens & Sex

Puffta and the Pink Paper have revealed the puffta 2005 survey results in an exclusive 3 page spread!

The UK's longest running gay teen website has revealed how gay teenagers are risking everything for sex. 35% admitted to having unprotected sex within the last three months, with most not knowing their hiv status or believing they are hiv negative.

You can exclusively read the results and Simon Johnson's own comments in this weeks Pink Paper (issue 887).

Simon Johnson, editor of puffta, said "With so many gay teens having regular unsafe sex, and the majority of those not knowing their status, it won't take too long for hiv and aids to enter this generations bedrooms."

Adam of positiveadam.co.uk, continues "It's hard to understand why so many gay teens don't know their status, or don't want to know. It only takes an hour or two to have a full sexual M.O.T. If you know you're positive you'll get the support and treatment you need to make sure you stay healthy."

The puffta 2005 survey was conducted over the summer months and the results are based on 800 completed responses from gay and bisexual young men.
